To prepare public works agencies to handle the work that lies ahead, the Infrastructure Investment and Jobs Act (IIJA) allocates $100 million for digital investments to maximize interoperability, boost productivity, reduce project delays/cost overruns, and enhance safety and quality.

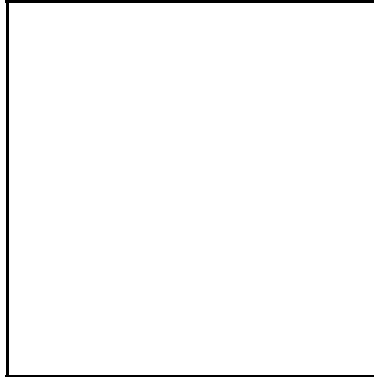

Is this enough? Is your agency optimized to deliver on-time on-budget projects with IIJA funds? How can YOU serve as a very visible steward of an unprecedented government spend on infrastructure?

Join your colleagues for this FREE lively discussion with a panel of public-sector project management, quality, and technology experts, where we attack critical issues including how to:

- Leverage the emerging role of new technology and the digital future of project management.
- Spot your agency's largest project management vulnerabilities (and how to fix them now).

- Implement best practices and get quick wins on improving public works project quality.
- PLUS answers to your most pressing questions!

If you are a government agency official, engineering firm executive, or anyone who touches public-sector construction and project management (for small projects, large projects, and everything in between), don't miss this critical and timely discussion to ensure you don't end up on the wrong end of news headlines in 2022!

Thanks, Mark. If Nathan can attend, that would be helpful.

We likely won't have time to delve into parking lots – though we could as part of the discussion of additional places where we'll need to explore adding more capacity. Brian is welcome to attend, but Nathan can likely cover the high level where we'll likely be.

I don't think we'll be into the details where Filipina will be needed.
